

Social and Personal

Miss HUBERTA POTTER, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Bailey Browder, will be guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Mrs. Robert W. Warden, of 1230 Pine street, before the dance which will be given on Monday by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. Houston in honor of their daughter, Miss Charlotte Harding Brown. The guests at the dinner will include Miss Russell French Earle, Miss Lucia Alice Padden, Miss Edith H. Baily, Miss Louise Adams Davis, Miss Roberta Brown Downing, Norman Dunning, Walter W. L. Fottorall, Henry H. Houston, William Foster Fottorall, William H. Du Barry and Joseph G. B. Moulton.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howard Colket will give an informal dinner at their home, 2008 De Lancy place, tomorrow evening. Their guests will be Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Mohr, Mr. and Mrs. Davidson Kennedy, Dr. and Mrs. Howard Davis, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Haupt and Mr. and Mrs. John Marshall.

Miss Colket will entertain at luncheon January 13, in honor of Miss Gertrude Tower, when the guests will be of the debutante set.

Mrs. William Paul O'Neill and her sister, Miss Sarah Lippincott, will leave today for Atlantic City, where they will stay until Friday. Miss Lippincott's marriage to Nicholas Biddle will take place Thursday, February 11.

The management of the Rittenhouse gave a most delightful little dance last night in the Blue-and-White ballroom. The dancing began at 8 o'clock and lasted until 1 o'clock, supper being served at 11 in the banquet room adjoining. The lights, which shone from overhead through a lattice work with Southern emerald and wistaria, cast a soft glow over the scene. A second soiree dancant will be given Monday, January 25.

Miss Elsa R. Reath will be given a theatre party by her uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. Benjamin Brannan Reath, on Monday evening, January 25.

Mr. and Mrs. Watson W. Walton, 135 South 10th street, will entertain at dinner tonight at the Manufacturers' Club. Their guests will include Mr. and Mrs. Walter G. Eels, Mr. and Mrs. Silas M. Tomlinson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Stockley.

The Junior Auxiliary of St. Francis House held its first rehearsal at the Rittenhouse yesterday afternoon in preparation for its annual entertainment and dance, which will be given in the ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford February 3. Miss Frances Livingston Sullivan is president of the auxiliary.

Thomas Evans has issued invitations for a theatre party, in honor of Miss Ellen Jaquet and her dance, Richard McCall, on Saturday, February 6. A supper and dance will follow at the Ritz-Carlton. There will be about 60 guests.

A most laudable and interesting feature in the most relief movement, so prevalent throughout the city these days, is the spirit of charity evinced by the little children. Last Saturday a number of sturdy youngsters were to be seen going to the home of young J. Burton Huston, Jr., 425 West Johnson street, Germantown, digging deep down in their small pockets for sundry nickels with which to gain admittance to an entertainment, which that small boy had gotten up for the benefit of the Belgians. The affair went off very well, and the sum of $15 was realized by the ardent young workers.

Miss Lella W. Waller, of Washington, is the guest of her niece, Mrs. Edward C. B. Fletcher, at her apartment, 135 South 18th street. Mrs. Fletcher will receive as usual on Friday afternoon after the orchestra concert.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE

TRAVEL articles have suffered severe amputations by reason of the war. There are no more articles about motor trips in France, resorts along the Riviera and climbing the Alps. These articles are all pigeon-holed, or returned to their authors' portfolios, until the end of the war and resumption of traffic shall again make them timely.

As a result the See-America-First propaganda is having a boom; not only as applied to these United States, but including South America from tip to toe. We probably shall hear much about trips to Alaska until the late spring and no one is advising a Mexican tour just yet. But otherwise, all America is in a fair way to have its head turned.

Of 14 travel and adventure articles in the current magazines, six deal with the possibilities of the two Americas, two are hunting stories, three are pioneer tales, one is a sea yarn, and two are biographical of outdoors men.

Reminiscent of many delightful descriptions and sketches of motor trips through France and Spain, is an article by Walter Hale with the suggestive title, "Staying at Home for Awhile—How the European War Should Encourage American Motoring" (1). Mr. Hale is a discriminating critic, and at times holds up the American roads and hostilities for very unfavorable comparison with those across the water, but in the main, his article adds allurement to the thought of a motor trip through New England.

The tariff in the best hotels of Paris, London, Berlin and New York varies very slightly. But the motorist naturally objects to paying similar charges in the smaller American cities. Outside of Paris rates scale down perceptibly. Rooms in hotels of the first class average from 80 cents up; breakfast is 30 cents; luncheon, without wine, 50 cents, and dinner, one dollar. In the smaller country inns, the rates are much more reasonable. All of which seems ridiculously cheap in comparison to what we have to pay in the small town hotels at home.

In the third of a series of articles on South of Panama (2), Professor E. A. Ross, of the University of Wisconsin, gives an inviting sense of the nearness and magnitude of a prehistoric civilization in the Inca ruins around Cuzco, Peru.

With its many furlongs of ancient walls, its "Temple of the Sun" and its splendid churches, it is to lovers of the past the most fascinating spot in the New World. Within a decade or two, Cuzco will possess comfortable hotels from which parties of "See America First" travelers will tour in automobiles.

Portions of 14 palaces of Inca rulers line the streets of Cuzco; these walls are of finely-cut blocks, laid in courses without cement. A needle or even a hair cannot be inserted between these great blocks. No doubt this is the finest masonry work in the world; yet the microscope shows that these stones were wrought not with iron or steel, but with tools of chert, an alloy of copper and tin.

He describes—A row of six porphyry slabs, ranging in height from 11 to 15 feet, 5 to 7 feet wide, and 3 to 6 feet thick. These stones must have been sawed out, for at the bottom of certain cuts, one finds the thin groove left by a stone saw.

Plunging Through to the Antipodes

Without so much as the quiver of a literary eyelash, Norman Duncan in "Cannibal Country" (3), recounts some yarns of Papua, over by Australia, beside which even our civilized war in Europe seems not quite so barbarous. He says that there are about 1000 white settlers on the coast, and about 400,000 natives of scattered and mutually hostile tribes in the interior.

In spite of the amazing point of view in relation to the taking of life, a white man is reasonably secure, so severely has the hand of the law fallen upon offenders, provided he walks circumspectly, with some notion of propriety in respect to alien property, dignity, and wives. "It is not," a planter explained, with no glint of amusement, "that a New Guinea native prefers a white man, for whom as a matter of fact, he has a considerable distaste." "Distaste," we exclaimed, in astonishment.

"Well, you see," the planter replied, "a white man is salty. And naturally, too, he tastes disagreeably of tobacco. You couldn't expect anything else, could you?" "It is not," a resident informed us, "that women are not particularly edible." We suggested that this was a singular thing. "They do all the work," the resident explained, "and are consequently lean and tough."

Some agreeable generalizing follows a description by H. M. Wallis, of the experiences of "A Naturalist in North Africa" (4). His party, consisting of "The Fat Man and 'The Thin Man'" roped with stout half-inch Manila, had successfully negotiated some very steep and precipitous cliffs, in pursuit of birds eggs. There had been perilous and anxious moments.

It was over, the boyish folly of it all! But it comes to this—once in a year or so, the man in us rebels against the encroachments of Time, and breaks forth. Gray hair shall not be a prison maker, nor stiffened limbs a cage. And it is something, as both this man and fat man agreed, to have craned over the brink and seen the woods below through a driving storm of birds; to have noted close at hand as one hung over the gulf of air, the soft drab dapples upon the back of the huge creature as he "sailed past, nor beat his broad wing dragon pennant"; to have observed for one's very self 12 to 15 pounds of bone and sinew upborne upon motionless planes, as lightly as floating gossamer. How—ye mechanicians tell us how?

Building Railroad Out of Rainbows

An interesting sense of men who think in terms of empire, who can see in the opalescent mist of a waterfall the shining steel rails of a transcontinental railroad, the fabric of whose dreams is turned into material substance, is given in "Rhodes' All-Red Route" (5). This refers to the African Cape-to-Cairo railroad whose construction now nearing completion, has been interrupted by the war.

At the time of his first visit to Victoria Falls, Cecil Rhodes had already conceived his great scheme—a later consummated through the war—for the bringing of all South Africa under the British flag. Rhodes' companion followed him one day out to the very verge of the falls. The companion tells the story:

"He started at the touch of my hand on his arm. Then as his eyes wandered back to the sheer, 300-foot drop of the Leaping Water Fall, the far-away look that I knew as well returned, and he was off again with his dreams. Yet it was not to the white cascade of the face of the Fall that he was looking, nor yet into the boiling depths beneath; but straight across to the opposite cliff, where the last of a long arch of a dozen or more rainbows spanned the gorge in a vivid mother-of-pearl.

"A—!" he thundered, and I caught the words only by bringing an ear close to his lips. 'Do you know that the natives claim that they can see far into the future by looking into the depths of that big rainbow? And what do you think I can see there? Two lines of shining steel—a railroad—running from one end of Africa to the other, and crossing this gorge right over there where the spray from the Falls will beat upon the faces of the passengers, just as it beats upon ours. To east and west I can see branches running, picking up business for the trunk, all the way from Cape Town to the Mediterranean. And look, 8—, do you see that bar of gold? That means that it's going to be an 'All-Red' railway; that it will run in British territory all the way.'

The piercing eyes under the beaming brows were shining as he turned to go, and I knew that tears of enthusiasm were mingling with the mist from the 'Smoking Waters.'

THE NEW MOTHER

He wondered if her hair was brown like teacher's, Or whether, like his grandma's, scant and thin. He wondered if the picture on the mantel Would not be hurt to see her coming in. He wondered if his curly dog would hear her And race out, barking, where the pantries grew; And whether that a little boy should fear her And stay inside, or go to meet her, too.

He wondered if the house would seem as empty Or whether there would be no place to play. He wondered if she wouldn't try to keep him When wander voices called him far away. He wondered, too, if daddy still would love him; If, when the stars had sparkled out the blue, She'd sing a little, friendly song above him— The ring of wheels—she kissed him and he knew.

—Abbie Craig, in Youth's Companion.
